HighScope for Parents

Do All Children Learn At The Same Pace?

No, each child learns in a different way, at a different pace. Although we all develop abilities in a predictable sequence throughout our lives, it's important to realize that each of us has unique characteristics from birth, characteristics that develop further through a unique set of everyday experiences and interactions. Each child is a unique individual, and learning happens in the context of each person's personality, abilities, and opportunities.
